By Jean Knott EDDIES PROVE VERY GOOD DURING AUGUST ON FIELDS By EARNEST J. LANIGAN.

"Very Good, Eddie," was played on the diamonds as well as on the boards during the last month of the pastime that now is in cold storage, the Eddies who were very good being Foster, of the Washingtons, and Roush, of the Cincinnatis. If these two Eddies ever played better in their fair young lives than they did during August, 1918, their friends do not recall when it was. The National Leaguer assaulted boxmen for a stick credit of 411, the American Leaguer jumped the slabsters for a mark of .381. Roush's fall drive carried him pretty nearly to the top of the smiting list, Foster's tacked about forty points on his average. Neither of August's "Very Good Eddies" played in that way when he was having his first major league trial. The Griffman was on the fast wheel before the Redieg, shortatop-ping for the Yanks in 1910, the last-year George Stallings bossed them, and only hitting 132. That was 692 better than Roush clouted when he better than Roush clouted when he received a fall trial from the White Sox in 1913, when Jimmy Callahan was their leader.

Foster's first hig league booster was the late Robert McRoy, business manager of the Indians. Foster and McRoy had played ball together on a Chicago semi-pro team and Robert, then Ban Johnson's private secretary, tried vainly to interest American League managers in him. So earnest was McRoy in his boosting of Foster was McRoy in his boosting of Foster that Eddie finally became known as "Robert's shortstop," but that title did not land him his first job with the Yanks. It was his brilliant work for Jersey City that carned him pro-

Roush, during August, played in thirty-three games, in twenty-seven of which he hit safely. He was at the plate 129 times, scored twenty-two runs and tore off fifty-three wallops, of which seven were doubles, four were triples, and three were home runs. The circuit clouts were obtained off Toney, of New York: Marquard, of Brooklyn, and Fortune, of

On August 22 Roush, batting against Barry Fortune, of the Phils, knocked out two singles, a triple, and a home run. Two days later a three-bagger H in the tenth, gleaned off Lefty George, of the Braves, was the starting point of Cincinnati's winning tally.

In addition to everything this is a war of unpronounceable names. When Miss Molla Bjurstedt came to this country from Norway folks balked at her Dame.
